Speaker says America hurting Namibian people

By Brian Justice
Kaimin Reporter

America and other countries contribute to the misery of the Namibian people, Victor Tonchi, refugee from Namibia and one time political organizer for the South West Africa People's Organization, said at a speech in the University of Montana Social Science building last night.

Tonchi told an audience of about 50 people that the American and European industries that are doing business in South Africa are paying taxes that go to the South African government and are used for military spending. South Africa disregards human life in Namibia, he added.

"It's my hope that the American people will do something," he said. "Europe and the United States should cease support in South Africa."

Namibia is controlled by the South African government and thus the people of Namibia are subjected to Apartheid policy. Apartheid policy is the policy of racial discrimination used in South Africa and enforced through a system of segregation similar to the one pushed on American blacks before the Civil Rights movement.

"It's (Apartheid policy) discrimination, some sort of philosophy about religion," Tonchi said. The Afrikaners (white South Africans) use quotes from the Bible to support it.

Tonchi said that under Apartheid policy the blacks are oppressed. The Afrikaners have control of the industries and blacks must go to the white areas to find jobs because of poverty, he added.

The blacks, Tonchi said, are:

- paid less than the whites.
- the houses they live in are of poor quality.
- the health care standards for blacks are lower.
- and the education standards for blacks are lower.

Tonchi said that he had no political influence that established his desire to be involved in SWAPO, a Namibian liberation organization. The Namibian people are born with the desire to be free from oppression of the South African people, he added.

South Africa imposes laws that it knows are bad, Tonchi said. The Namibians join organizations that they think will lead to liberation, he added.

"SWAPO has been engaged in diplomatic cycles and at the same time, the war for liberation," he said. See "Speech," page 3.

New ASUM president wants changes made in budgeting process

By Kevin Brooke
Kaimin Reporter

ASUM President-elect Phoebe Patterson wants to change the way ASUM handles budget requests made by University of Montana organizations.

Patterson and Jeremy Sauter, vice president-elect, will take office during Spring Quarter's first Central Board meeting.

Rather than holding one marathon meeting each year to approve the budget, Patterson said she would like ASUM to work on the budget year-round. Patterson and Sauter are working on the specific structure they would like to see used, and would like to have some changes in place this spring.

For example, Patterson wants to develop written guidelines that would govern how ASUM should distribute its money. The guidelines would indicate how much money ASUM had allocated in previous years and outline the budget process for student groups.

Patterson, who served two terms on CB, said that the structure of the meetings will be changed. In addition to a stricter use of parliamentary procedure, Patterson said a "hard and fast deadline" will be established for early posting of the agenda for the Wednesday night meetings, so that more people will be notified of the meeting in advance.

As for the Students for an Honest and Effective Government (SHEG) party, Sauter said the organization will be good for the administration because it likes to "get things done." SHEG will have 12 of the 20 seats on CB next quarter.

"The party is a good group of people and not just a one issue organization," he said.

Patterson and Sauter also said they would like to improve its communications between student government and the rest of the university.

According to Patterson, in addition to using the Kaimin and committees to inform students, classroom surveys will be conducted. She also plans to set up an information booth at registration next fall, and possibly prepare an information packet for new students, outlining different committees and programs.

Patterson says students need to keep informed about issues that will affect ASUM's lobbying effort at the 1985 session of the Montana Legislature. Funding for many UM programs will be taken up by the legislature, she said, and students must be able to demonstrate their interest in these areas to the legislators who will determine UM's financial future.

Missoula use increases Home-grown pot proving popular

By Rebecca Self
Kaimin Reporter

Home-grown marijuana is becoming prevalent in Missoula, according to Sgt. Jerry Crego, head of the Missoula County sheriff's crimes against people section.

Some marijuana is still being imported into and smuggled across the country, but most of it found in Missoula is grown in the basement of people's homes, Crego said.

Within the past 10 years, marijuana growers' ingenuity and their use of books on growing marijuana have produced better strains of the plant, Phil Willumsen, Missoula County detective, said.

"It used to be ragweed, but now it is good stuff," Crego added.

The THC level or potency of marijuana has increased drastically. Therefore, the price has also gone up, he said. Some of the high-quality, home-grown marijuana sells for $2,000 a pound, which is almost equivalent to the price of one ounce of cocaine, Crego said.

Most people grow marijuana to supplement their income, because they do not have to pay taxes on the money they make from selling the drug, Willumsen said.

"The price is good, so besides having enough smoke for themselves, they can also sell a bunch and have a lot of money," Crego said.

Marijuana is Missoula's biggest drug problem because it is readily available, Crego said. However, other drugs, including cocaine and heroin and the illegal use of prescription drugs, are also a problem.

The strongest marijuana available in Missoula is known as Sinsemilla, or "Sins." Sinsemilla is an unpollinated female cannabis plant, which has been found to contain up to 6 percent THC (the most active ingredient in marijuana).

Most marijuana in the past contained only 0.5 percent to 4 percent THC.

Sinsemilla is the type of marijuana grown in some Missoula homes.

Drugs have become widespread because more people have accepted their use and many even consider it a status symbol, Willumsen said.

"There does not seem to be the human cry against drugs anymore," Crego said. "People are more concerned with drunken drivers than they are with drug abusers."

At one time only "hippies" used drugs, but a "social class barrier no longer exists," Crego said.

"We have arrested people in dumps and we have arrested people in real fancy places," Willumsen added.

Despite the fact that only four men from the sheriff's department work with Crego on drug cases, $100,000 worth of drugs were seized and 47 people were arrested on drug charges last year. All who were prosecuted pleaded guilty.

Five people have been arrested so far this year.

Willumsen said he has seized up to 80 pounds of marijuana and $14,000 in cash in one arrest.

Even someone caught with just enough marijuana for himself can be charged with possession. See "Drugs," page 3.

Volunteers needed for Squat Squad

Dog feces is no fun. It sticks to shoes and it stinks. To keep our campus clear of the nasty stuff, the university is getting a dogcatcher.

But there is no reason to cut off the nose to spite the face, so to speak, because dogs - though their by-products are foul - add lots to campus atmosphere.

The next time you come out of a building and someone's faithful hound is patiently waiting by the door, notice how many people stop to pet it and say hello. There are many people in college who are away from the canines that they love, and they sight of a panting face is a small but appreciated pleasure.

Most of the dogs on campus are friendly and well behaved. Their masters are students who feel guilty leaving them either chained or locked up all day. So they bring them along. There is lots of space here and an otherwise sedentary animal has room to move.

If dogs were biting people or were constantly fighting, there would be good reason to make this a mutt-free campus. But they don't. All they do is chase sticks, squirrels, frisbees and each other, to the delight of a majority of the humans watching.

And they crap. Their only real demerit. Nobody likes it except the flies.

So UM will be getting a dogcatcher. Those who have bailed their dogs out of the pound know that it costs considerably more than a six-pack of Alpo. In fact it can run - with impound fees, kennel fees and fines - to over $20 each time Fido is sent up the river.

This editorial is aimed primarily at the dog owners. If you would ban together and propose to the powers that be a plan to curb your dogs, perhaps a dogcatcher won't be necessary. If there are 20 of you who would donate an hour a week at different times scooping poop so the campus was being de-turded daily, Bowser may be allowed to roam. The responsibilities of owning a dog go beyond feeding it. There is his spirit to be thought of as well. An hour of cleaning up after him isn't too much to ask in return for a healthy, happy hound.

The Squat Squad would have to be made up of people dedicated to the cause. They would be held accountable for negligence that results in soiled sneakers.

But the benefits outweigh the demands. On sunny spring days it would be more fun throwing a frisbee for your dog rather than dollar bills to bail him out.

Second Glance by Dan Carter

Parting shots

One week from today, I'll be taking my 55th and last final exam of my college career. After that I'll be done with college. That's a promise.

I'll be leaving gool ol' UM with mixed feelings of euphoria and sadness. I'll be glad to be finished, but then again, I won't. There will be some things I will gladly leave behind and there will be others I will be sad to let go of.

I won't miss standing in lines for seemingly hours on end to register for classes, pay fees and buy books. I won't miss doling out my entire summer wages with one scratch of my hand. I won't miss the over-inflated egos of student politicians who don't care much for this university, but merely love listening to themselves talk.

I won't miss trying to do research in the library and finding the periodical I need has the article clipped out. I also won't miss the rudeness of two-and three-person gossip sessions that take place during lectures. And I certainly won't miss trying to dodge wall climbers and hacky-sackers in the UC.

What I will miss about the University of Montana are friends and the challenge to learn.

Even though there were many professors who acted like they didn't give a damn about their students, I'll miss the challenges put forth by academicians like Ross Toole, Clancy Gordon, Richard Drake, Bob McGilfert, Paul Lauren and Ron Perrin. Professors who insisted that their students search deep inside themselves to find out what they stand for and to carefully study the past to find out where they are going. They are the ones that kindle that tiny spark of learning in all of us and in turn make learning more exciting.

However, what I will miss the most are friends.

It has been said that the friends you make in college are the friends that you cherish the most. Sure there is the kid who lived down the block and your buddies from high school, but the friends you make in college - the ones you live with, talk to and scream at - are the most cherished of all.

Graduation time is a time of looking to the past and the future. I look back on my college career and wonder if it wasn't too much party time and not enough study time (but I don't think I would do it any other way if I were to do it all over again). But the look ahead is somewhat scary, especially for those of us who aren't assured of employment when we get out into the "real world."

But more importantly, graduation time is a good time for thanking those friends who mean so much to us. Those friends whom we could drink with, talk to (because our folks aren't around), manage to live with us and those whom we could learn about life with.

After next week, I may never see some of my friends again. It will be time to move on and go our separate ways. Some I will keep in touch with and some I won't.

I've made so many good friends since I've been here, and the past five years have been great because of you guys. I don't have to mention names, you know who you are.

Thanks friends.

session of marijuana, a misdemeanor. The maximum penalty for this charge is $500 and six months in jail.

However, very few people caught with a small amount of marijuana are charged, according to Robert Deschamps, Missoula County attorney.

"Most of the time the marijuana is confiscated and that is the end of it, because law enforcement officials have more important things to worry about," Deschamps said. "It is a lot like juveniles being caught with alcohol — it is poured out and that is the end of it."

The sheriff's department handles all of Missoula's drug cases and "we just do not have enough funds or manpower," Crego said.

Sometimes police officers from other cities in Montana will come to Missoula to work undercover, but "we still need more people to work on these cases," he added. "We feel we are probably only touching the tip of the iceberg."

Besides independent investigation, Crego said he receives most of his information from people who are mad at someone involved with drugs and want to get "back at him" by turning him in.

A person who has been arrested will also "squeal" on his buddies in hopes of receiving a lesser sentence, Willumsen said.

Many informants are threatened by the person they turn in, but "as far as we know, none of those threats are ever carried out," Crego said.

When the department receives information on a person involved with drugs, the detectives find out as much about the person as possible by watching him and keeping a file on his activities. They look for such things as where the person lives, where he works and whom he associates with.

Crego said his office has continuing files on people that begin as far back as the mid-70s.

If the department has enough evidence on a person, it can request a court order to either wiretap someone's phone or to obtain a search warrant.

"Search warrants are our best tools, but it is sometimes difficult to obtain the necessary court order," Crego said.

Working on drug cases is frustrating and difficult, not only because of the restrictions and guidelines put on the department, but also because the people in the drug business have become more careful, Crego said.

"People in the drug business are suspicious and paranoid," he said. "Therefore, they deal with the same people only, making it harder to get information."

The courts have also become more lenient, which "makes it harder on us," he added.

All confiscated drugs and drug paraphernalia are kept as evidence until the trial is over and then burned. Any confiscated money from drug sales is donated to the sheriff's department for future investigations.

"We realize that it would be impossible to 'dry up' an area of this size and that drugs will probably always be around just as alcohol is," Crego said. "But we try, because that is our job."

tion," he said. "We are sure that one of these days Namibia will be independent."

Tonchi left Namibia in 1978 after being expelled twice from South African universities.

"I don't know why they expelled me," he said. "They just did it."

He taught at a SWAPO refugee camp in Zambia from 1980 to 1982 and was offered a scholarship in the United States. He is a graduate student in Public Administration at the University of California at Los Angeles.

He said that he has not been in Namibia since 1978.

Tonchi's visit to Missoula was sponsored by a grant from the Lutheran World Ministries of New York.

New choral work to premier tonight

By John Kappes
Kaimin Arts Editor

Tonight is "special," according to Thomas H. Cook, who conducts the University of Montana Wind Ensemble. Together with the University

Choir, the Wind Ensemble will perform Gloria Swisher's "Words to a Grandchild" for the first time anywhere at 8 p.m. in the University Theater. Swisher, a composer from Seattle, visited UM two years ago. She left impressed, and wrote "Words" with the students she met here in mind.

In several respects the piece was a collaborative venture, Cook said. And it's changed in small ways even during the past few rehearsals. Through all that time Cook has been in constant contact with Swisher, alerting her to potential problems in the score and offering advice. So far, of course, she's heard the whole thing only in her head.

What was it about UM that found its way into "Words?" Cook mentioned Swisher's sentimental ties to the school—her father got his degree here in 1922—as well as her friendship with Donald O. Johnston, composer-in-residence at the time she visited. The score concerns family ties: a translation of sentiment into a musical idiom she found particularly Montanan. Which means that Native American influences are at the forefront.

"Words to a Grandchild" was in fact first conceived as a choral setting for a poem by Chief Dan George, a Montana native. But Cook plays down the Montana bluster, insisting that Swisher's work is "regional" in its appeal. He's hoping that tonight's performance will help her get the work "published"—that is to say, recorded and reviewed by the national music press.

Swisher will be in Missoula for the premier, and will speak this morning at 9 in Room 218 of the Music Building. The UM Concert Band will also play tonight; all festivities are free to everyone.

ALSO IN ARTS NEWS:

"Eddie Lechner's Trip to Paradise," written by Jura Soyfer, a Viennese Communist/gadfly in 1936, will hit the Great Western Stage March 8 and 9 at 8 p.m. Soyfer died in Buchenwald in 1939; his work attempts to recreate the atmosphere of decadent, pre-Nazi Central Europe. An ambitious undertaking that sounds well worth the effort.

GLORIA SWISHER, whose "Words to a Grandchild" premieres tonight at 8 p.m.

Kyrsko, Glass lead Griz 69-54 win; MSU next

By Brian Mellstead
Kaimin Sports Editor

Larry Krystkowiak and Marc Glass combined for 46 points and led the University of Montana Grizzlies to a 69-54 win over Northern Arizona in a first-round Big Sky Conference Tournament game at Dahlberg Arena.

The stage has been set for a rubber game between the Grizzlies and the Montana State Bobcats Friday, in Ogden, in the second round of the Big Sky Tournament. MSU beat Boise State University 65-64 last night in Bozeman.

In the other tournament games last night, Weber State beat Idaho 67-58 in Ogden and Nevada Reno beat Idaho State 64-59 in Reno, setting up the other semi-final game.

All four home teams won. NAU shot 72 percent in the first half but Montana committed only two turnovers and the Grizzlies managed a 32-27 halftime lead.

"They (NAU) did what they had to do," Griz Coach Mike Montgomery said. "They moved the ball well and got it into the hands of their shooters."

The Griz opened the game playing a man-on-man defense but Lumberjack guard Andy Hurd change Montgomery's mind. He scored eight first-half points on four field goals all from more than 17 feet out.

"He was getting open and we went to a zone (defense) because it was easier to locate him," Montgomery explained.

Hurd's scoring pattern didn't change much in the second half as he hit four field goals in that stanza also, but the Griz zone defense shut down the rest of the Lumberjacks.

UM extended its lead to 40-31 on two Krystkowiak free throws with 13:47 remaining. Hurd hit two free throws for the Lumberjacks almost three minutes later which capped a 10 to 4 NAU scoring spurt and pulled them within three at 44-41.

The Griz, however, got a bucket by reserve forward John Bates and Doug Selvig's only field goal of the game which started them rolling again.

The Griz opened-up a 52-44 lead with 7:11 remaining and that was as close as the Lumberjacks got the rest of the game. Glass scored seven of his 17 total points and Krystkowiak scored six of his game-high 29 in the remaining seven minutes to ensure the win.

Rob Hurley added 10 points for Montana and Bates came off the bench and tallied eight. Hurd led the losers with 18 followed by Mike Elliot with 10.

Montana outrebounded the Lumberjacks 36-19 led by Krystkowiak and 6-foot-4½ Selvig with 10 each. Elliot, NAU's 6-foot-7 center, led the Lumberjacks with only three.

For the game, Montana shot 46 percent from the floor compared to 60 percent for Northern Arizona, but UM attempted 18 more shots than did NAU.

NAU's lack of attempts is because of its slowed-down approach to the game. On at least a half-dozen occasions the Lumberjacks shot with five or less seconds left on the 45-second clock.
